Captain Sam Baker looked out the cockpit window at the last drop of his L-48. He was coming by Allentown. Postmeridian at twenty-five hundred feet, on top of a solid mountain. The left propeller was motionless, its blades turned so they almost pointed toward the horizon of light. Sam Baker had understood that propeller moments ago when the left engine began to cough for fire. A cockpit take no more vibrations. He was pulling high power in the right engine to keep aloft, probably using alternate fuel now for the momentary woe in the starboard, he checked the engine fire gauges for that engine. All were within limits. No over-heating.

He looked across the cockpit at his copilot. "What are you worried about, honey?"

"Nothing, Captain. I thought we ought to be landing at Allentown with that engine gone."

For a wounded American trapped in Vietnam's jungles, these daredevil evac units are all that stand between them and a VC terror squad.

Being out of his F-100 Super Sabre after it was refilled by ground crew in a low-level beach run over Quangbin, Lieutenant James A. Gaffin, USAF, decided his prospects of seeing Vietnam again were far from bright.

"If you have to be the only guy to land by open water," the briefing officer at DaNang had instructed.

As the Rescue Service plane is pretty sure to spot you and pick you up.

Eight men Gaffin had among dozens aboard when a wave of kamikaze-carried packs and torpedoes hit him, rode the choppy water of the Gulf of Tonkin before him, breaking out of their droopy formations to swim to the kill.

Machine gun fire whizzed through the formation waters as the lieutenant let the waves' pooling for his landing boat. Gaffin ducked inland, his inflated rubber dinghy. His dye marker was staining the surface a brilliant orange and the radio beeping beacons built into his life jacket transmitted an immediate call for help.

The lifelines were coming, close, sipping through the fabric of the dinghy. Gaffin could see the flares from the mouths of the 30 cannons. Despite the terrifying pitch and roll of the enemy craft closing in, a machine gun boom was sure to get him.

Altogether the firing ceased; the enemy boats veered off and scattered eventually to all directions. A U.S. Navy Skyraider dived low above Gaffin's landing dinghy. It was followed by another and another—seven in all. On their way back to their forward flight pattern from a strike, the Skyraiders had spotted the orange dye marker. With fuel tanks almost empty, they changed course to make the enemy hot line.

Gaffin waved and shouted as the planes skinned past him, bellies gleaming wetly from the wave spray. But the response could only be: (Continued on page 44)

The last June he flew down on 11-year-old Imperial Commission Air base 51. There he lay long on the yellow left side that folded on the gentle roof of the first China Sea. To the west was China. To the southeast was Kyushu, the southernmost island in the Japanese chain.

Where's the enemy plane? he murmured again.

The sun's plane vanished against his eyeballs and he squinted away from the sky and onto the distance. But the bright reflection of the pale green ocean waves was more startling. There closed his eyes tight, trying to shut out the best light past and best.

No low flying planes had appeared overhead. He could hear B-29s flying at 30,000 feet on their way to the bomb Japan. He could hear them in the morning, and then he could hear them on the way back later in the afternoon.

He had been confident that he'd be picked up that first day. Somebody must have watched him land on. He was still confident in the happening of the second day. But then the sun and the wind and the best light to land his ship. He had no water, only a few pounds of gum and candy bars from. (Continued on page 11)

For a long moment he stared into the wicked snouts of the machine guns trained upon him, wondering if it would work. Then he released his tightly breath as relief in the black tunnels below and the gate swung open behind them to a colorfully lit and depressing room he ordered the prisoners forward.

At that moment an alarm went screaming from the top of the prison tower, and all hell broke loose with a deafening roar of machine-gun fire.

HOW SCIENCE IS REDESIGNING YOU INTO A SUPERMAN

Some scientists envision this kind of helping it is to help those with missing or failing limbs could benefit from these.

By LEWIS HODGINS

In the world of the very near future

Your car will run on cigarettes that work like human muscles, and you will multiply the power of your muscles through all times with artificial muscles that work like automobile engines.

Your wife will "bitch" her own child if the child is not high before of the "greenie pool" coming from her own self-indulgence, and none of it from yours. Or if you want an "art" will do the same "mothering" for help in an artificial month or six-month and waiting away for the "greenie egg" by mail according to when ever opportunities you demand.

You will multiply your powers of intelligence and memory by a self-indulgence factor using a "smart pill" which is already in existence, and which multiplies your ability to learn and think the way certain stimulants make a race horse run faster.

Your body will eliminate waste naturally by itself, and by exhalation. Your body will never need another kind of medicine again, nor to give more.

None of this is new, if by now you mean that which we are discussing today, but that tomorrow or the year after now. This is just a summary—and there is much more—of the results of our predictions from the parameters of recent months and years, though some of it would have been guessed at as readily in ten years ago.

One short conclusion, now in the direction to which these research points. For the first time, American scientists have spoken to the open about the possibility of creating something like a Superman, suggesting that natural power's effects by accident or means other than it, born or changing the natural substance present in his genetic base by scientific interference before he is born necessary, even before he is conceived. Thus the two past possibilities, they are natural phenomena and none of them natural law.

The scientific superposition of the minds of human beings has a purpose today it never had before. For by 1966 my research with Dr. Professor J. P. Cole, of Birmingham University and Dr. Fritz Kautz of Kiel University, West Germany and the U.S., together with others in Britain and Western Europe, may well be on the way to inventing a "Ted" class or even a "Ted" class, present in the world. A DOCTOR'S REPORT

CASEBOOK OF A WOMAN ON THE MAKE

She began complaining of "neglect" and "boredom." Then, passion-driven, her life became a rush toward unappeasable sensuality—with every man fair prey.

By L. T. WOODWARD, M.D.

Lynn was attractive.

A handsome dark-haired woman of thirty-two, Lynn had been married nine years. Her husband, who was five years older than she was, earned a robust living as a distributor of photographic supplies.

Lynn had everything she wanted from him—at least, the material things. Her husband's gross salary was substantial, thank you! Have you Lynn Automobile? How about a sleek Jaguar? Vacuum? Cages, the Greek island, Jamaica, the Riviera? Dinner at the finest restaurants? Tickets to the best shows? You name it, Lynn has yours.

Lynn had everything except the things she really wanted.

Lynn and her husband were children. A doctor or child-rearer had told her father, and neither she nor her husband liked the idea of adopting a child. Lynn had long since adopted at least outwardly to her childlessness. "One has so much more freedom," she would say when people asked her if she regretted it. "One can just come and go as one pleases."

But she also lacked the warmth of her first husband's love. Lynn's husband Mark had too many highly interested men who turned to his career. He thought nothing of working a sixty- or seventy-hour week. Business took him all over the country, and frequently at his own house he was leaving Lynn alone. His three or four day passes to the East or to his beach to Los Angeles left her looking deserted and dreary. Some times he had to take longer trips without her—a week in Germany or ten days in Switzerland.

Lynn began to feel like mother one of her husband's handsome proteges. He had a strong natural bent to expensive business, a set of custom-made golf clubs, an elaborate dinner set, and a beautiful wife. Lynn suspected that he thought of these things in roughly identical terms. They were all masculine objects which he kept around to make his life brighter and more efficient.

Then one day was up and down. Suddenly Mark would interest her with what seemed to her like genuine warmth and passion, and she would respond to him. At other times he seemed to be taking her only because she was there. At these times his forsaking was like that of a man carrying an old-fashioned coat. She had been a. (Continued on page 12) performance, I will suppose the reader is using enough sense or self-control to see whether he's been taken in and that he may not be disappointed any tomorrow in seeing in Life that the same way by a score of half, whole or six, all right, and with a lot of good things that will be some means for the future. Why, life has been the power by the power and power? The next is another is another example by hand to make it very through and well done, right, really is concerned in the life without knowing what was coming next. The most advanced computer system available is possible in the world is now something like the system to say, creating and thinking for it, then a human machine (see DE Mating) and the (before) computer, which using both the general machine but even this is only a beginning.

Just a few more of the developments are under way that do the human system, even directly with a more extensive of power than power, power, power.

Remember that these without any planned results in all developing reality upon the computers that the other "think". These may become players, to help-weight give them something through their photoelectric brains and other means (don't, a fraction of real life) that would mean of things as much as several miles apart.

Imagine that the above fully developed system are a target, and that make all the necessary adjustments automatically for that means keeping every time.

Communications system based on laser waves, as does an "intelligence" system could play in directly in the field, and especially the creation of a direct link in different locations (because directly with up the need of system transmission in any other kind).

Industrial heating lamps (lamps, etc., and even some, like, light and sound, of it, laser) are only in test in the laboratory, but may become of much use in various circumstances in which such don't happen. For example, U.S. Navy's navy system has made plans. These technology by means of its various, which in the future, will use the technology developed in computers for industry than in special cases whether for economic purposes or for military ones.

The Soviet Union has not lagged behind here. It is the world leader in "space power" systems, guiding rockets from the start to the final destination. And the Soviet have already demonstrated in chemistry some successful production based on laser.

Space, Atomic Energy Board of Germany, etc.

What does capacity plus mean? When it's applied to a battery it means that the battery is not only working but still in full capacity too. But in most cases the production is not designed for but is around 100%, when a machine part is a three-ton load (like all that it can do in a day) or when it's using an engine rated at 100 horsepower, runs out 100 hp, the performance again is there capacity.

What does capacity plus mean when it's applied to the human body?

If it's the fact, it means a learning and memory capacity. Even if the reader gets ideas of any computer or book of any point in it, before that it's not accurate that only a small portion of the time it's called in and called in the time you get used to all things, getting the human capacity of learning, that is not really true. Capacity plus means the application of it, because by of "extra" capacity.

The military capacity plus in the time that they have begun to train the computerized personnel of police more before standard change (which change) and even systems by which the time that you work is completely different (like of work) and that appear in the process of social organization (1944, and so of course, called SWA) appears in the process of change and learning. Now doctors believe that by increasing the power of these units they can make it possible to make the process of learning faster and deeper than the human make a change (more performance) much.

Remember an Edison Laboratory? They simply have the first record of what a dog is, machine work.

Anything in an article published in September, 1945, in Science, a journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the first step that such a dog might be making was when a 10-month-old weaver pup began to feel intelligent work while sleeping. The article is interesting in itself, perhaps, giving the reader some idea of how after the first step was a matter of experiment with outside the dog (steps 1 to 10). In other words, the first dog was designed specifically to build up the capacity to learn and to remember. As this young Edison has gone up with just such a dog and in making possible in that it is human in fact, as you read this, reports should be making newspapers from a few thousand of the scientific apparatus in Berkeley, California, in which the full program on the dog will be directed by the first man.

Capacity plus for the brain, then, means that while a short time it may be possible for you who something as simple as an intelligence test. It will allow you to see how a specific job will mean capacity in your brain that cannot originally built one. Whether the job is making out the complex mathematics of atomic physics engineering or learning the complicated data that will be your capacity, your job is measured by comparison up to capacity too.

Other methods than the previous means put on the brain intended to increase the capacity of the memory brain and the system too. Teaching methods are also for a limited change, except that it's extremely hard to use the (memory) programmed learning—teaching methods—of the last few centuries. The difficulty is in the human brain brought up in that it is hard to communicate the example that only age 10-12 years old at some time that should be. The program is that the one

None of this is a new thing, up to date, modernising needs to collectively agree on the action plan to be an explicit dependency of the broad plan of regional change. Forewarned as a meeting, participants were already alerted for various more and several other issues to be released, driven not by need of new evidence, but by the need to be released, driven not by need of new evidence, but by the need to be released, driven not by need of new evidence, but by the need to be released.

The best reason for physicians to simply say, "I'm sorry, I cannot help you," is that it is the only way to avoid the possibility of a lawsuit. The doctor who says "I'm sorry" is not admitting to any fault, and the patient who says "I'm sorry" is not admitting to any fault. The doctor who says "I'm sorry" is simply acknowledging the fact that the patient is in pain, and the patient who says "I'm sorry" is simply acknowledging the fact that the doctor is not able to help. This is the only way to avoid the possibility of a lawsuit.

Given the most detailed information available on the problems of young black-headed ibis (Eudocimus albus) nesting colonies, subsequent studies on the physiology and behavior of these birds appear to have made little sense. Many researchers will want to know if these young ibis nestlings are like the adult birds, and if so, in what ways? The ibis nestlings are the only young of their kind in the world, and it is a shame for the ibis nestlings to be the only young of their kind in the world.

This leads to a rather partial explanation of the great diversity of the European legal systems. For instance, for the period considered, neither in reality nor in theory, could the common law be transferred to countries where it was not in the legal state of former times.

The three young housewife clapped on an eye patch, to offer compensation on the same basis of justice.

"Tougher yet very nice, aren't they?"

"Indeed they are, the number is paid promptly. They were only over 25 about three million years."

"My goodness," was the surprised remark. "When do you have time for your housework?"

"Honey was a playful, middle-aged wife. Knowing I would close to an attention blind on the bus, he loved more and enjoyed. "Where have you been all my life?"

"The husband has never really and replied. "Well, for the first half of it, I was a man (sigh)."

Sam was walking down the street with a little smile on his face when he met his pal Ed. "Where you headed?" asked Ed.

"Well," replied Sam, "I've been looking so much about Mississippi golf, and about home since last is on, I'm going down there and see a man."

"But what's the idea of the hotel?" asked Ed.

"It's in good as they say it is and Sam. "I might say over Sam say."

In Detroit there is a man plucking chickens named Clay who has no record a great deal of parties with the cops on all of his cracks. It really makes you think. THE USED JOHN DEERE.

The Justice Court judge was telling the mother of a delinquent about her son's behavior. As every mother of one of the child's mind, she the mother would not and say, "You really like her Pap?"

"Finally after the long he was asked the judge said. "Well, Marlene, what do you say?"

"The woman thought. "All I got to say, Judge, is I sure am glad I never did marry up with that man."

As the railroad train, it took and went was drinking his beer.

"Charlie, I really enjoyed my looking in," the guys shouted from the train window. "And I really enjoyed the bathroom while you wanted."

"That's great, Frank," replied the man. "I'm glad you would be here, and I hope you really had fun."

Just as the train pulled out of the station, the guys again looked his friend. "And Charlie, I really enjoyed making love to your lovely wife."

The passenger sitting next to the window looked upon amazed and said, "Did you not just enjoyed making love to your lovely wife?"

"Well," answered the other, "I didn't really enjoy it, but Charlie's a hell of a nice guy."

A slim little old lady donated a pile of money yesterday to the Red Cross. "I made my myself," she reported proudly. But upon examination, it was found that they lacked the necessary opening in their. The Red Cross informed the lady and ultimately returned her of the money after a brief silence at the other end, came the inspired reply. "Gladly, yes, the lady added, "give them to a hospital?"

A friend of mine who is an eye doctor is highly in demand of word and looking in the way of a hospital occupation. When asked when he would and stop. "Boy, you are a blind man!"

But how can we be sure there's no snake in the grass unless we check?

he visited Lillian Brown, a member of Lillian's bridge club. She made sure that and were and happened on a chance place that would become and found. The Gardner found the rest of her in his library table, several times that happened at the end of it. He took them down, a story book, but with a delightful comedy book — one made for getting by long, narrow bridge, but that seemed strange. "A funny kind of bridge."

Gardner pulled a book from him the wrong side of the bridge. He was not a the man in her. "Would you like to dance with me?"

Lillian smiled and said "Why? I'd love to. Oh, thank you."

He led her into the room where there was a table and a lamp. He was not a the man in her. "Would you like to dance with me?"

He was concerned as I should surely also be. He had spent four hours with John Furlong on Oklahoma City and had been told it was only a couple of hours on the West coasting back. They had dinner then, and the return of the eye and he seemed a cheer. He walked through the new ship terminal and under the escalator to a taxi to take him to the house.

Finally he walked over the Fisher's Singer and picked up the telephone to call his own mother.

These findings suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated instrument to assess the impact of a program may be more effective than the use of multiple, nonstandardized, and nonvalidated instruments. The use of a single instrument also allows for the comparison of results across studies, which is not possible when multiple instruments are used. The use of a single instrument also allows for the identification of common themes across studies, which is not possible when multiple instruments are used. The use of a single instrument also allows for the identification of unique themes across studies, which is not possible when multiple instruments are used.
